

IN THE SERVICE

Proctor Neil, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Neil, 395 McIntyre street east, expects at some future date to return to Canada from England where he has been undergoing extensive engineering training since January 1. "Proc," as he is better known by his friends in North Bay, is now doing important engineering work in the Old Country and expects to return to Montreal soon in which metropolis he will continue important war work.

"Proc" went to England with Allied War Supplies, a concern working on important war assignments. He and 17 other engineers were sent overseas to study production work and when their period of training is completed, they will return to accept key positions in a great new factory to open at Montreal.

Athletic Star

"Proc" Neil was well-known in North Bay athletic circles during his studies at the Collegiate and following his graduation. He was a keen rugby enthusiast and a boxer of no mean ability. Small, and not very hefty, "Proc" was, nonetheless, a dangerous bit of football timber on the gridiron and packed a mean wallop in either mitt when inside the squared circle. Shortly after his graduation at the North Bay Collegiate Institute and Vocational School where he was a honor student, Proctor went to Montreal, where he attended McGill University. He attended the university for four years.

In later months he spent much time in the United States continuing his engineering studies. Unable to enter the army because of his eyesight, "Proc" is now doing very essential and valuable war work in the engineering and production field. No definite date has been set for his return to Canada, however.
